Brazilian Independence Day, or Dia da Independência in Portuguese, is celebrated annually on September 7th. It commemorates the country's independence from Portuguese rule in 1822, a significant moment in Brazil's history. On this day, Prince Dom Pedro I declared Brazil's independence with the famous proclamation, "Independência ou Morte!" ("Independence or Death!")

The day is marked by military parades, public celebrations, and patriotic displays, especially in the capital, Brasília, where a large parade takes place in front of government officials, including the president. The Brazilian flag, national anthem, and symbols of national pride are prominently featured.

Independence Day is not just a historical remembrance but a day for Brazilians to celebrate their culture, sovereignty, and unity as a nation.
